Coaching-Methods | Personal Style

What do I understand by Coaching?

Coaching is a temporary consulting process focusing on professional topics. The client develops his or her own strategies for finding solutions and achieving goals; in addition, the coach imparts experience and expert knowledge on a selective basis. Coaching requires a high level of commitment, i.e. motivation, willingness to develop and activity on the part of the client. A coaching process is goal-oriented, transparent, comprehensible and follows a concept.

Main focus:

- Executive-Coaching
- Leadership-Coaching
- Competence-Coaching
- Individual Coaching
- Team Coaching
- Leadership development

Methods:

Strengths analysis, feedback discussions, system visualization, confrontations & provocation, analysis, sparring, success reflection, career analysis

Self-Conception

- If you want to lead, you have to be able to lead yourself.
- If you want what you have never had, do what you have never done.

Coaching-Methods | Personal Style

Mode of Operation

My way of working is determined by my infectious unshakably optimistic style and my gift for motivation. My deep conviction that human beings live in systemic contexts and interdependencies, but that they possess almost inexhaustible life-shaping possibilities that often lurk unused within them, lead to my individual and consistently resource- and goal-oriented approach. Since the personal goals and development possibilities of the client are always in the foreground for me, I focus in my work primarily on potential release, motivation & fun, change of perspective, differentiation of personal perception, courageous lateral thinking and Encouragement. Those who have experienced me in my highly appreciative style will especially remember my stylistic devices of confrontation - provocation - irritation, reflection on success, as well as the development of sovereignty and composure. My coaching style is based on appreciative interaction with the client. My varied methods include conversation as well as experiential and action-oriented methods. My clients can expect in particular: commitment and empathy, professionalism, clarity, competence, goal orientation and authenticity, flexible and exclusive design, individual planning, loyalty and absolute discretion.

Target-groups

- Top Management
- Executives, board members, managing directors
- Senior and middle management
- Executives
- Management teams
- high potentials

Coaching-Methods | Personal Style

Procedure (excerpt)

Integrative approach, systemic-constructivist and humanistic, cross-school with resources and goal-oriented individual conception, goal-oriented, transparent, comprehensible. The coaching style is based on an appreciative interaction with the client. My methods include conversation and experiential and action-oriented procedures. My personal choice of methods depends strongly on the personality of the client, the defined goals and the given time for the coaching process. The basic structure of my approach is the C-O-A-C-H model: COME TOGETHER: contact phase, getting to know each other; ORIENTATION: content orientation of the consulting relationship and the approach, topic and goal definition; ANALYSIS: investigation of the client's concerns and environment; CHANGE: change phase, process and expert consulting, development of new/alternative possibilities for action; HARBOUR: goal achievement and conclusion, development of an action plan, implementation agreement, transfer assurance, evaluation.

What is my philosophy in coaching?

I have a positive, optimistic, holistic and universal view of the world and experience people as self-determined and responsible beings on a wide variety of levels. My approach is systemic-constructivist as well as performance-oriented and focuses on the development of abilities and talents. The detection and release of limiting beliefs and potential-inhibiting blockages can also be part of personal development and is positively integrated into the coaching process.

Coaching-Methods | Personal Style

What are my key strengths in coaching?

Topics: Leadership, leadership competence, self-leadership, optimal utilization of potential, personality development, goal definition and achievement, networked and flexible thinking, decision-making, change processes, strategy development, controlling management processes, communication, conflict management, team leadership and team integration, presentation and performance training, self-marketing, sustainable performance optimization, successful stress management, dealing with power and business politics,

Own skills: clarity, self-leadership, empathy, building trust, high analytical competence, consistent goal orientation, reliability, consistency, professionalism

Sense for delicate business and personal situations, optimal exploitation of potential, profile sharpening. and sustainable personality development, pinpoint analyses

How do I secure the results of the coaching?

Transfer assurance: tasks and personal development steps between session dates with sustainable review. Intermediate meetings in a constellation of three with the coachee's manager. Final meeting. Optional follow-up meeting (transfer check) after about six to nine months.

Evaluation: feedback forms, participant survey, reflection on the coaching process.

Self-reflection: supervision, intervision, collegial case consultation.

Continuing education: national & international workshops, congresses, trainings.

Own scientific work in the context of authoring; cooperation with universities (lectureships) and companies.

Which coaching assignments do I not accept?

Relationship of trust / personal fit with the coachee cannot be established.

If expectations are placed on me that have illegal and/or ethically reprehensible intentions.
